Translation

■ Jonas, how old are you, actually?

○ Twenty-eight. Why?

■ Just wondering.

▲ Good afternoon! Can I help you?

○ We are looking for a present for Lotte. She turns ten on Saturday.

She holds up a small soft grey toy cat. Jonas raises a hand.

▲ Perhaps a toy? Here is a little cat.

○ She already has a cat. A real one.

She looks at Jonas over her glasses, as if she is trying to remember.

▲ The one from number seven, perhaps?

▲ Or paints? These are very good.

○ Lotte has enough paints. She paints every day.

■ What about a sketchbook?

○ Good idea. She does not have one yet.

On the counter, a big sketchbook and a small one, each in blue, green and yellow. She presents them with both hands.

▲ Here we have a large one and a small one. Blue, green or yellow?

○ Yellow. Lotte likes that.

■ How much is the large one?

▲ Twenty-eight euros.

○ That is expensive. And the small one?

▲ Twelve euros.

■ But that really is small. Lotte paints a lot.

○ Then we will give her the big one. Each of us pays fourteen euros.

She takes off her glasses, a hand on her heart, delighted. Jonas has gone red. The yellow sketchbook is in his hands.

▲ Wait! Jonas! The little boy with the trumpet from number seven!

▲ You used to be under my window every day. With your trumpet.

He puts the money on the counter, the yellow sketchbook under his arm, and turns to the door.

○ Good afternoon, Mrs Lehmann. Here is the money. Thank you very much! Goodbye!

■ The little boy with the trumpet?

○ I have nothing to say about that.

Out on the street, Jonas walks very fast, with the yellow sketchbook under his arm. His ears are still red.
