Articles, identity and ownership

A singular countable noun usually needs a small word before it: a cat, the key, my key. Use a to introduce one thing; the when the listener knows which one. Do not say my the key.

Use an before a vowel sound: an egg, an engineer. The sound matters, so a university but an hour. Start with the scene words a cat, a key, an egg.

A possessive form expresses ownership. Before a noun say my key. On its own say mine: The key is mine. For negation with be, use isn't, aren't or I'm not.

Form	Example	Meaning
a	Milo is a cat.	Introduce Milo as one cat.
an	I'm an engineer.	Introduce your profession.
my	This is my key.	Say that the key belongs to you, before the noun.
mine	The key is mine.	Say that the key belongs to you, with no following noun.
isn't	He isn't my cat.	Say Milo is not your cat.
not	I'm not hungry.	Say you are not hungry.

Milo is a cat.

Introduce Milo as one cat.

I'm an engineer.

Introduce your profession.

This is my key.
