Translation

Kong has many lists.

There is a long list on the fridge door.

■ Monday: get up at six.

■ Six fifteen: wash my face.

■ Seven o'clock: breakfast. Two eggs.

■ Half past seven: go to the café. Table number three.

■ Tea without sugar. Go to the company at eight forty-five.

Kong gets up at six every day.

On Sunday evening his mother calls.

○ Kong, are you well? Are you eating properly?

■ I'm fine. I eat at seven, at half past twelve, and at six.

○ What are the people at work like?

■ They're kind. The new neighbour comes to the company too.

■ There's a cat at that house.

○ A cat? You're afraid of cats.

■ A little, Mum.

○ Eat well. Sleep well. Don't be late.

■ I'm never late.

It is Monday morning. The clock is not running.

Kong is still sleeping.

■ What time is it? Oh! Half past eight.

Today he does not wash. He does not have breakfast either.

Table three in the café is empty.

▲ Where is Mr Tea Without Sugar?

At the office, Kong's place is empty.

● It's nine ten already. Kong still isn't here.

■ Hello. I know, I know. I'm late.

■ The clock isn't running. And the list is at home.

● It's all right. Here's coffee. The meeting is on Thursday.

■ Right. Thank you very much.

Suea sits on Kong's desk.

● Why are you afraid of cats?

■ Before, Grandma's house had a cat.

■ It was a big black cat. It was on my face.

■ I was five then. Really scary.

● But Suea is grey. He's a good cat.

■ All right, Suea. Sit here. The computer is off limits.

It is evening. There are three clocks on the table.

■ Here's a new list. Three clocks. Don't be late. Suea is grey.
