Translation

■ Good morning, Greta. What is the matter?

○ My table is gone! And the chairs too. Everything here is empty now.

■ There is a white table in my kitchen.

○ And chairs?

■ Yes, two chairs.

○ Wait a moment. I would like to see that.

In the flat she stands by the small white table, a cake in her hands and a coffee pot on one finger.

○ Exactly! That is my table. And those are my chairs.

■ I am sorry. But it was not me.

She puts the cake on the table and sits down, smiling, not angry.

○ I know that.

○ The table fits well here. You can keep it.

■ Really? And what will you do in the café?

○ There are still enough tables there. You need one.

○ And I have breakfast with me too. Where are your cups?

■ I only have one cup.

She holds up a second cup from her apron pocket, grinning.

○ Then you can have this one too.

■ But who comes into my flat at night?

She glances at the front door and smiles.

○ Mrs Brandt's key fits every door in the house.

■ Every door?

○ Every door. Now let us eat. Enjoy your meal!

So you have breakfast with Greta at "her" table in your kitchen: cake, coffee, two cups. Now and then she glances at your door and smiles.
