Translation

■ Good afternoon! Come in. Would you like tea?

○ Yes, please. Thank you.

■ My tea is black and strong. Just like me.

You take a sip.

○ Oh! This really is strong.

You look at the wall of photos. Frau Brandt points at a smiling couple. One small frame is turned to the wall.

○ So many photos! Is that your family?

■ Yes. My son and my daughter. The woman with the long hair is Lotte's mother.

○ How old is your son?

■ Fifty. And my daughter is forty-four.

She holds a small old photo of a laughing young man, and smiles.

○ And the young man there? Who is that?

■ My husband. He is twenty in the photo.

○ Does he live here too?

She says it quietly.

■ No. He is no longer alive.

○ I am sorry.

■ Thank you. He was a good person.

■ That is Lotte with her brother. He is still a baby.

○ How old is he?

■ Six months. Lotte is nine, almost ten.

■ Your family lives in Hamburg, does it not?

○ Yes. My parents still live there.

■ But you are not alone here either. You have us and Mikesch.

Mikesch knocks the turned frame off the shelf. It lies face up: a boy of ten with a mop of black curly hair.

○ Mikesch! The photo! Mrs Brandt, who is the boy in it?

She hangs the frame back, face to the wall.

■ Mikesch, leave the photo alone!

■ Would you like more tea?

Hilde hangs the photo back, face to the wall, and pours you more tea. Mikesch sits on the shelf and looks at you. Who is the boy with the curly black hair?
